Topic: Automating Security &amp; Compliance In Highly Regulated Environments

Speaker: Nicole Johnson, Chef

The business demands innovation. IT infrastructure and application development agree. But of course it's not that easy. As IT Operations successfully automates systems and starts building new systems and deploying changes to systems faster, risk is introduced. However, if we incorporate security and compliance based testing earlier in the process, that risk can be mitigated even further than traditional security and compliance tooling and methodology.

Automated security and compliance tests are how we track and assess our risk levels as we release changes. I'll demonstrate a live walkthrough of building a compliance testing profile based on an industry-standard CIS Benchmark. Learn how to codify compliance profiles, incorporate such compliance testing into your release automation processes, and keep your internal stakeholders saying "yes, and" instead of "no, because...".

This is the upcoming Python conference I told everyone about during the announcements: <https://2017.pygotham.org/registration/> - I don't know if any early bird tickets are left, but they have academic tickets for $75 - if they have them left - I expect them to sell out soon (as per their tweet on the 8th).

Sadly the A/C goes off at 6pm and we can't do anything about that. We're trying to cool the room ahead of time. Things will get better in September.
