Title: Introduction to Site Reliability Engineering

Speaker: Nathen Harvey

Abstract:
Site Reliability Engineering (SRE) is a set of principles, practices, and organizational constructs that seek to balance the reliability of a service with the need to continually deliver new features. An error budget is the primary construct used to help balance these seemingly competing goals.

This talk is an introduction to the principles and practices of SRE with a focus on error budgets and their components: service level indicators (SLIs) and service level objectives (SLOs).

Speaker Bio:

Nathen Harvey, Cloud Developer Advocate at Google, helps the community understand and apply DevOps and SRE practices in the cloud. He is part of the DevOpsDays conferences global organizing committee and was a technical reviewer for the Accelerate State of DevOps Report.
